With the life time cost for average automobile (not luxury models or SUVs) ownership and operation now exceeding $450,000, -- more than twice the cost of median priced American homes, the simple but often overlooked or forgotten advice to merely go to the library and pick up a book on car buying, before buying or having one serviced again, can literally double a teacher's or student's lifetime net economic worth, and conserve or increase personal, retirement and charitable budgets. This is especially true if one can plan or schedule their life and work around the automobile. Just Don't Have A Car, Man!

Most of us unfortunately cannot just go carless. But we can put the brakes on the accelerating economic, social, and environmental costs of automobile ownership and operation before we suck known oil reserves dry -- by supporting cost effective public transit and alternative transportation projects, and land use regulations which facilitate carfree living or less careful lives, where automobiles are less necessary for meeting 75 to 90% of our day to day personal transport needs... and by not over-valuing the automobile, and by not paying too much for cars every time... and by merely making the elementary, free, and academic Car-Deal-Literacy-to-Library-Connection for oneself, for your fellow staff, faculty, students, families and friends. Just mention it, they'll secretly love you for it, forever...

Their savings or benefit may indirectly accrue to you, your organization or cause.
